Caminando, vol. 36

Social Mobilizations and Pandemic

Deadline to submit a proposal: January 10, 2022

Presentation

Caminando is a bi-annual journal that aims to disseminate alternative information on social struggles and human rights in Latin America. Since 1980, Caminando has been a forum for reflection and action, through its mission to set forward critical perspectives on major issues impacting Latin American socio-political life, and shared struggles for the defence of rights and self-determination in Latin America, as well as in Quebec and Canada.

The journal also publishes stories and poems, as well as illustrations and photographs pertaining to the themes addressed in each issue. Caminando is published in French, in paper format. Articles are also published electronically in their original language. Texts from previous editions are also available online. www.caminando.ca

Caminando is published by the Committee for Human Rights in Latin America (CDHAL), a solidarity organization which is dedicated to defending and promoting human rights in reciprocity with social movements and communities in Latin America in the struggle for social, environmental, economic and cultural justice. www.cdhal.org

Next edition of Caminando

With the world-shaking pandemic of March 2020 came multiple restrictions and profound changes with respect to social resistance and mobilization. As always, capitalism managed to turn the crises to its advantage. The flaws of neoliberal policies have been clearly and overtly revealed. Furthermore, 2021 has been a year of political agitation in many Latin American countries. Popular demonstrations had to be creative and adapt to the current situation—but we can only wonder how they are faring nearly two years since the pandemic began. What are social movements demanding? How have the people organized to fight for their rights and defend their territories in a pandemic context? Social activist groups and movements had to innovate and sometimes rely on virtual platforms, to continue their struggles and compose with new issues brought on by COVID-19. For some of these groups, new tools have emerged. How have they succeeded in organizing their actions virtually... and safely? In Chile, Colombia, and Brazil, among others, people took to the streets despite government warnings or bans. State repression, government clampdowns, institutional violence, and domestic abuse have become a greater risk than the disease itself.

The upcoming volume of Caminando, whose first issue will come out in April 2022 and the second issue in October 2022, will paint a picture of the situation in various Latin American countries, including social struggles and policies. Both issues will fuel reflections on how social movements have changed throughout the pandemic.

Here are some examples of topics and subtopics for your contributions:

- Analyses and reflections on social and political demonstrations taking place in various Latin American countries, and the place of social movements in the context of COVID-19;
- Analyses of living conditions and social inequalities which have been made worse by the pandemic;
- Access to communications and the need to reinvent ourselves and innovate in a pandemic situation;
- Digital extractivism, i.e., the issue of data monitoring and surveillance, social media, influence of public opinion through algorithms, and circulation of fake news.
- Any other contribution related to the main theme.

Text format

Poems, testimonies, interviews, spoken word performances, critical analyses, event reports, reflections, and any other type of contribution will be considered.

Editorial criteria and processes

At submission

Articles are first read by the journal coordinator before being assigned to a member of the editorial board, according to their field of specialization and/or mother tongue. The criteria for the publication of papers in Caminando are that:

1. The article's subject matter is discussed through a critical lens.
2. Depending on the type of text, statements made by the author are supported by relevant documentation.
3. The text is structured in such a way as to facilitate readability (logic, clarity, conciseness).
4. Quality of the language is maintained throughout all types of contributions

After submission

On submission, the manuscript is assigned to a member of the editorial board covering the subject area, according to their mother tongue. The board's role is to edit articles, taking into account analytical and critical positioning, structure and quality of language such as listed above.

Furthermore, it is the board's role to assess whether received manuscripts respect Caminando's objectives, values and themes, while ensuring a variety of opinions and analyses, and to request modifications if needed. The Editorial Committee reserves the right to refuse an article that does not meet the stated criteria.

Translation and Revision of Texts

Following their review by the editorial committee, articles are translated by a team of volunteer translators. Translations are consequently revised by a volunteer reviser before being finally copyedited by the Caminando coordinator.
